Sound ***
In the piano world, Sviatoslav Richter remains a Big Deal. A recent poll of professional pianists listed him as the second greatest pianist of the 20th century, behind only Rachmaninoff (whose music Richter played superbly).

		Since Richter's death, in 1997, various labels, including Parnassus, Praga, and Melodiya, have been retrieving and publishing his live performances from the 1950s. Richter gave his first recital at 19, in 1934, but aside from a handful of 78s, we've heard hardly any of Richter's playing from the 1940s. This changes with the publication of these two CDs' worth of live performances from 1947-49. Surprisingly, these recordings all come from tapes, recorded with German tape decks and microphones seized by the Russians after World War II. Russian engineers quickly learned to use this equipment, and, as these long-dormant recordings demonstrate, they used it well. The sound is true and clear. Most of the music is by J.S. Bach, Beethoven, and Schumann, all staples of Richter's repertory throughout his career. His delicate, pinpoint touch in Bach's Sonata in D, BWV 963, takes one's breath away. Although he could handle the technical demands of any Beethoven, the three sonatas here (3, 9, 22) aren't particularly virtuosic, leaving us the opportunity to enjoy Richter's superb musicianship and unmatched lyricism without the distraction of amazing technique. That comes in during the notorious second movement of Schumann's Phantasie in C, Op. 17, which Richter plays at a brave tempo with power and accuracy. This set is a treasure. –Robert Levine	PACD 96059/60)
